IBMers are helping to put their communities back to work, one skill at a time.

We are teaming up with IBM Service Corps Reignite to help our communities move forward in these turbulent times. In tandem with IBM, we are working to help local job seekers and business owners gain new skills and assist in jump starting our regional economy.

How we can help

Volunteers from IBM will work in partnership with us to provide:
- Skills development, mentoring, training, career guidance, business planning resources, and consultations around:

New skills
- Job seekers can learn new digital and professional skills with courses and training offered through the SkillsBuild Reignite program.

Innovative ways of working
- Coaching on today’s business practices, including Agile, Design Thinking, virtual collaboration, communication and presentation skills.

Business strategies
- Experts can assist business owners develop the best strategies to overcome short and long-term challenges.

What we offer

Job seekers & other learners
- Access to resources to help with professional development
- Enhance skills for your current job
- Gain new tech skills

Business owners, including entrepreneurs
- Work with IBM consultants on business strategies to support recovery and how to engage customers digitally
- Guidance on using government programs and stimulus efforts to offset economic loss

Community partners
- Help business owners handle economic turbulence deftly
- Participate in a far-reaching effort to help others

Partner with us in our efforts to speed up the recovery of local workforces, communities and economies: ibm.org/initiatives/ibm-service-corps/reignite